"Rethink Afghanistan," is a documentary directed by Robert Greenwald that brings the reality of war for the Afghan people home to U.S. audiences and allows the Afghans to speak for themselves. The movie uses testimony from the heads of think tanks, former U.S. officials, including ex-CIA operatives, spokespeople for nongovernmental organizations, and a few honest reporters to expose the complete disconnect among the U.S. government's pretexts for occupying Afghanistan—stopping "terrorism," helping women's rights, helping Afghanistan develop—and shows in pictures the results of our occupation.
